

INSIDE ONE LEAGUE'S DRAFT

The draft for the 10-team TBML fantasy football league was held Sunday. The league awards six points for touchdowns and bonuses depending on the length of the score and yards accumulated during the game. Teams carry 15 players and each week select a lineup consisting of one quarterback, two running backs, three wide receivers/tight ends, one kicker and one defense/special teams. The draft order was selected randomly and a traditional serpentine format was used.

About Round 1	Had to take LT; made sure I got Michael Turner as well.	I considered Larry Johnson among others, but didn't want to outsmart myself.	Johnson was the best player available with at least four things going against him.	I went with Alexander (over Frank Gore) because Seattle's offense is slightly better and Alexander is a proven entity. Gore has to show me he can do it again.	It was between Addai and Gore; Addai is healthy and the Colts score more.	Gore was the best player available and San Fran's offense is improving.	I was hoping for Addai, but Westbrook is the best all-around player and the best on the team.	Manning was the safest pick; everybody else had too many questions.	I traded for him last year and he was a monster.	Because of where I was drafting, I wanted to get a good quarterback (Brady) right out of the gate.
